Dear Supporter,

Throughout my career as a Professor of Anesthesiology, Perioperative and Pain Medicine (with a focus on pediatric cardiac anesthesiology) and Pediatrics (specializing in cardiac and general pediatric critical care medicine) at Stanford University School of Medicine, I have devoted myself to improving outcomes for patients in the most challenging circumstances. Beyond my professional work, I have also experienced the impact of cancer within my own family, which has deepened my commitment to supporting innovations that can ease suffering and extend life.

The Sage Oncotest is one such innovation. By helping to identify which treatments are most likely to succeed for each individual, it allows patients and their physicians to make more informed decisions. The result is greater precision, fewer ineffective therapies, and a higher likelihood of both improved survival and quality of life.

What makes this project so compelling is its dual mission: to provide access and to build evidence. Patients who could not otherwise afford this advanced diagnostic test will be able to benefit from it immediately. At the same time, the project will gather essential data to validate the clinical and economic value of SAGE Oncotest, accelerating its path toward broader use and coverage.

I strongly support this project and encourage you to do the same. Your contribution will not only provide patients with access to life-changing diagnostics today, but also generate the science that ensures equitable and effective cancer care for countless others in the future.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to reach out.

With gratitude,
